

Sunday

THESE they were . . . waiting at the edge of the ice rink as the "big guns" of the European playdowns fought it out for a place at Oberstdorf. The Sunday Sliders, a happy bunch of club curlers who began life at coaching classes set up at Hamilton and decided they'd like to carry on seeing each other.

Ian Hamilton seems to be the man mainly responsible for keeping the Sliders together. It all began when some local curlers turned up for introductory coaching classes run by the team at Hamilton.

The beginners were having so much fun and got on so well together that they decided Sunday afternoon was better spent on the ice than slumped in front of the TV or reading the Sunday papers.

They have not looked back since then.

It makes a significant point that it isn't always at junior or even primary school level that you can attract new players to the roarin' game.

Given the chance the adults will turn out as well and if they, many as parents, get the bug for curling there's a good chance they will also get their children involved.

Well done the Sunday Sliders. You'll take some licking!
